

Froyle Neideck is a contemporary visual artist, specialising in creating bold paintings of dramatic colour and rich texture.

Froyle paints what she is most passionate about, because it is this energy that creates such vibrant works of art. She enjoys working with mixed media because she has found that using a variety of medium creates a freedom of expression unrestricted by traditional expectation. Froyle particularly enjoys abstract art because she believes the non-representational format allows for a greater sense of personal interpretation; both for the artist and the viewer.

“My inspiration comes from colour itself, and my approach to art is most akin to abstract expressionism. My paintings are a celebration of the creative process; whereby the initial inspiration is the springboard and from this, the art evolves”.

At the moment music is playing a vital role in Froyle’s creativity. It is the catalyst from where she is drawing her emotional expression and her paintings are often the execution of a visual colour melody.

Born in Auckland, New Zealand, Froyle moved to Sydney, Australia in 1970 and to the Sunshine Coast, Queensland in 1983. In 1994, and then again in 2003, Froyle travelled to Sydney for further art training at the School of Creative Arts. During the past thirteen years, Froyle has been involved in many group exhibitions and has held a number of successful solo shows. Froyle has attended workshops in NSW and QLD and is now teaching others from her life experience. Froyle’s adventurous travels also inform and inspire her creative works, including a recent trip across The Nullabor.
